SEOUL — The South Korean interior minister, Kim Chong Hoh, resigned Tuesday following the dis-closure that a student had been tortured to death while in police custody.

President Chun Doo Hwan made a public apology over the incident. He named Chung Ho Youg, a former general, to replace Mr. Kim.

South Korea's national police chief, Kang Min Chang, formally acknowledged on Monday that Park Jong Chol, 21, died of suffocation last week after his head was forced into water in a bathtub during a police interrogation.

Mr. Park was a third-year student majoring in linguistics at Seoul National University. According to a Seoul newspaper, he had twice been arrested in connection with anti-government demon-strations and had been sentenced to 10 months in jail. He had not served the sentence, however, because it was suspended for two

Mr. Kim said Tuesday that he and Mr. Kang had decided to resign to take political and moral responsibility for torture. He was speaking to reporters shortly after Mr. Chun ordered the police force to make every effort to prevent any repetition of such an incident,

In his acknowledgment Monday, Mr. Kang said two officers of a police unit tried to make Mr. Park talk by plunging his head into water. The youth suffocated when his throat was forced against the bathtub rim, Mr. Kang said.

On Tuesday, President Chun told the interior minister: "I express my deep regrets about the unexpected incident coming at a time when our police have been making sustained efforts to develop into a democratic force by standing at the vanguard of safeguarding freedom and human rights of the citizens."

FRANKFURT - The dollar news that Japan's finance minister had flown to Washington for talks with his U.S. counterpart, James A.

Monetary experts said the meeting called at the request of the Japanese minister, Kiichi Miyazawa, could be the first step toward a new international accord to brake the U.S. currency's slide. Since then, however, the dollar has fallen almost 10 percent against the yen and Washington has done nothing to halt the decline.

The officials said Mr. Miyazawa also would try to seek a renewed U.S. promise that it would not try "talk down" the value of the dollar against the yen, or move its value by public pronouncements. The export-oriented economies

The crew member's warning, made after investigators had searched his house in San Salvador for drugs, caused "quite a stir" at the Ilopango Air Base, where the covert rebel supply operation was based, said an American official familiar with intelligence reports on the matter: But the incident did not attract wider attention at the time and federal narcotics investigators continned their work, apparently without any interference from the White House or elsewhere, Drug Enforce-

Several congressional, administration and drug enforcement offi-cials said that, to date, they have found no evidence that Colonel North or anyone else in the White House interfered with the drug investigation or were even aware of it. Officials have concluded that the crew member's warning probably was a bluff.

The officials also say the evidence suggests that the drug smug-gling was "a free-lance operation" carried out for the personal profit of the flight crews, not for the benecontras, or anyone else. Several unrelated government investigations have suggested but never proved that the contras themselves have smuggled drugs to raise cash for their war effort.

Still, early this month, word of this incident began circulating in the White House and in other government agencies, and some senior officials became "very, very wor-ried that Ollie really had stopped that investigation, and this would be the next big scandal" in the evolving Iran-contra affair, a former White House official said, using Colonel North's nickname.

U.S. Envoy Blocked Morals Charge

LONDON (UPI) — The U.S. Embassy said Tuesday that an American accused of exposing himself to a girl was allowed to leave Britain without being charged because the U.S. ambassador had refused to waive the man's diplomatic immunity.

The Foreign Office initially had said the man, the husband of a U.S. Embassy employee, had been accused of raping an English girl, but later said the formal charge would have been "gross indecency." The gur's age was not given other than she was of school age.

The 30-year-old man, who claimed diplomatic status as the husband of a member of the U.S. Embassy's technical and administrative staff, returned to the United States with his wife in December 1985. The couple were not identified. The Foreign Office asked Ambassador Charles Price to waive the man's diplomatic immunity so he could be formally charged and prosecuted, but he refused, the spokesman said.

LONDON (AP) — President Konald Reagan's administration has helped shield Nicaraguan rebels from charges that they abducted, mullitude and executed civilian and military captives, the human rights organization Amnesty International said Wednesday. It said the U.S. government had "in general dismissed such reports of abuses as false or grossly exaggerated" while apparently basing its views on information attributed to the U.S.-backed rebels known as the contrast. This has "increased the likelihood that abuses continue to be committed." It said committed," it said.

In a letter sent Oct. 21 to the U.S. secretary of state, George P. Smitz, Amnesty International's secretary-general, Ian Martin, said there were continuing reports of "indiscriminate and often fatal attacks on civilian concombatants" in Nicaragua.

Sri Lankan Rebel Is Reported Killed

MADRAS, India (Renters) - A Tamil militant leader has been killed by a powerful rival group in Jaffna in northern Sri Lanka where Tamil separatists are battling the Colombo government, guerrila socrees said here Tuesday.

They said Mendis, commander of the People's Liberation Organization Tamil Eclam, was killed last week by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil

Eclam, another rebel group.

Uma Maheswaran of the People's Liberation Organization said the incident was part of the Tigers' strategy to eliminate rival rebel groups and establish supremacy in Jaffna.

Ecuador General Rejects Coup; Congress Seeks To Remove President

By Joseph B. Treaster
New York Times Service

QUITO, Ecuador — A rebellious air force general who was freed from custody in exchange for President León Febres Cordero has said he would continue to oppose the president by peaceful means but would not participate in a coup attempt.

Lieutenant General Frank Vargas Pazos remained in hiding on Tuesday as the president's oppo-nents in the National Congress pro-pared to begin a review of Mr. Febres Cordero's conduct that could lead to impeachment pro-ceedings against him.

General Vargas dropped from sight over the weekend after the sident was seized by comman dos at an air base on Friday and held hostage for 12 hours. On Monday, General Vargas, speaking to reporters in the living room of one of several houses in the port city of Guayaquil in which he said he has been hiding, denied any advance knowledge the president's abduction. He said he had gone underground because "the guarantees were not clear" that he and the insurgents would receive an amnesty promised them by the president.

Mr. Febres Cordero made the promise while he was a captive. While being held, he has since said, he was beaten and threatened with

General Vargas said he planned to stay in hiding until the president officially declared that there would be no reprisals, and ontil judges formally dismissed the charges of insubordination for which he had originally been placed in detention

On Monday, military court officials said that the insubordination charge had been dropped, but that a previously unpublicized charge of bribery had been left standing.
In the interview, the general said

Was he prepared to lead a coup?
"Never," General Vargas retorted, "I am a civilized man."

The general said he had been offered asylum in Venezuela, but planned to stay in Ecuador and run for president. "I think I have the capacity to do it," he said.

The chairman of the panel is former Senator John G. Tower, Republican of Texas. Mr. Tower, sccording to Mr. Abshire, "is very much looking forward" to the interview "sometime after the State of the Union" address.

Lovesick Moose Sheds Antiers and Desire

The desire that made a moose devote 76 days to courting a cow in a remote pasture in Shrewsbury, Vermont, apparently dropped off with his ant-lers. "Looks like he's hit the road," said Donald Gallus, a state game warden.

The 700-pound (320-kilogram) moose showed up at Larry Carrara's hilltop farm in October in the mating season and was obviously taken with Jessica, a Hereford cow, muzling her and not letting her out of his sight.

During his stay, more than 75,000 people drove to the fairs to witness the odd love affair. But it was too hot not to cool down. "All his sexual urges or virility are gone once the antiers go," the game warden said. Buil moose lose their antiers in the winter and grow them back in the spring and summer.

The Carraras were sorry to see him go. Mr. Carrara's wife, Lila, said that "we got very at-tached to him, we really did." -ARTHUR HIGBER

Israel Considers Recalling Journalist For His Reports on Iran Arms Affair

He filed several dispatches for Israeli radio, quoting sections of the report, and appeared on U.S. television newscasts to describe its contents. Mr. Shiffer emphasized the report's contention that Israel had initiated the White House's secret arms-for-hostages exchange with Tehran and had pressed aides to President Ronald Reagan to keep the exchange going when they were losing confidence in it.

Aricla Ravdel, a spokeswoman for the Israel Broadcasting Authority, confirmed that Mr. Shiffer was the subject of a review to determine whether he violated the authority's regulations by giving what she called unauthorized interviews about the report to the NBC and CBS networks.

Ms. Ravdel said the inquiry began after the authority was in-formed by the Foreign Ministry that Mr. Shiffer had appeared on the two networks. She said the authority was reviewing tapes of the broadcasts to see if Mr. Shiffer gave opinions and commentary that violated the authority's code of WASHINGTON - Employers across the United States will have to verify the citizenship status of all new employees, Americans and foreigners alike, within 24 hours after they are hired, under rules presented Tuesday by the Immigration and Naturalization Service. The rules will carry out the landmark immigration law, signed Nov. 6 by President Ronald Reagan, that prohibits the hiring of illegal aliens. That prohibition is now in effect but the new rules specify in detail the procedures employers most follow to demonstrate compliance with the law.

A final version of the rules will be issued and take effect in mid-April after a period of comment. The new law also offers legal status, or amnesty, to illegal aliens who have lived in the United States continuously since before Jan. 1, 1982, and the regulations set forth the procedures for this as well.

A confidential draft of the rules shows the application fees that the snows the application rees that the government is considering charging illegal aliens seeking legal status: $100 for each application and $50 for anyone appealing the demial of an application.

The decision to increase the meetings during this seventh round of talks, which is expected to last six weeks, apparently stems from a meeting last week between the new chief Soviet negotiator, Yuli M. Vorontsov, and the chief American negotiator, Max M. Kampelman. Alexei A. Obukhov, the deputy Soviet negotiator, said last week that the two men had discussed "procedural matters" during their wo-hour private meeting. At Mr.

Vorontsov's request, that session dispensed with the traditional meeting of all six top Soviet and American negotiators.

LONDON — The history of the English theater is the history of its Shakespeare productions. At the moment the Royal Shakespeare Company, which does most of them, is becalmed, turning out elaborate but superficial stagings. Meantime the way is open for alternative approaches.

There are two ways that Shakespeare might go. A meticulous, restrained puritanism with the accent on narrative - a sort of super-Royal Court style should sit well on large public stages. Or so the National Theatre's "King Lear" suggests. Complementing that is a small-scale method, explored by some fringe groups, one of whom, known as Cheek by Jowl, has opened a season at the Dommar Warehouse with "Twelfth Night."

This is an outrageous production. Costumes are contemporary pop, the setting is indeterminate and the characters, an international conglomerate, mostly speak standard English bot Sir Andrew is a dimwit from Dallas (or from "Dallas") and Maria a broad gone intermittently gay as well, and at the end Duke Orsino, proposing to Viola, finds himself embracing abiguity. This production may sometimes try too hard, it may be too complacent about the fact that its actors, in fringe tradition, can all play musical instruments, but it frequently hits the play right on the nose.

Its pièce de résistance is the drinking scene, which climaxes in a rancously competitive rendition of "My Way." That, obviously, is not in the text but it illuminates what is: the hysterical joylessness of titled drunks trying to assert their superiority over the rest of the world and over each other. It is a riot, and so it gives a perfect one to the killjoy Malvolio. Even critics who hate the production have raved over Hugh Ross's Malvolio, but it's no good pretending that he exists independently of the rest of the show. He is rooted in it, from his prim days of prosperity in a three-piece suit through his hilarious excursion into yellow stockings (and, in this version, scoutmaster's shorts), to his from the Bronx. Scenes are transposed, a major char-acter omitted, and songs interpolated. Antonio, the obsequious steward again, he makes his threat of homosexual sea-captain, is brought emphatically out revenge quietly, just to us: a chilling stroke of genius. of the closet. He certainly makes a point when he His reality is almost matched by Melinda McGraw's kisses the embatrassed Sebastian, but he doesn't have make it quite so often. The Clown and Andrew have and herself with him. The lovers are less convincing than the clowns.

Shakespeare depends finally on his words, and inexperienced actors find comic prose easier than lytical That gets a very big laugh. But it also nails down the verse. And the production needs its small stage. On a perennially narcissastic and fantasizing duke, and does large one its charm would wither and its tricks appear it through a farcical device that Shakespeare has left presumptuous. But it knows what it is about. Three lying about, and that certainly fits the play's sexual emblems—a lute, a clock, a wheel — dominate Nick Ormerod's creamy set music. Time and the sea are the authentic Shakespearean themes. Ormerod founded Cheek by Jowl with the director Declan Donnellan: clearly one of the brightest new talents in the theater.

> There is a recurring strain of literate whimsical comedy that might be called historical-fantastic. Christopher Fry wrote it in the 1940s, Tom Stoppard in the '60s, and John Clifford revives it for the '80s in "Losing Venice" at the Almeida, Writing about an imaginary Spanish duke dispatched to Italy on a military mission by a wife and a monarch who hold him in equal cootempt, Clifford explores the idea of war as a virility-substitute. Like his predecessors he is on the side of humanity. Like them he is worst when philosophizing about it, best when cute and funny. His idea of the doge and his lady as a homey old Scots couple doing their best is a scream, perfectly acted in a production that appropriately originated two Edinburgh festivals ago.

"Journeys Among the Dead" is the aged Eugene Ionesco wrestling with his family ghosts: fragile and clongated but with a self-regarding intensity about it. It has been brought to Riverside Studios by a company of ex-students, and a student production - of the most earnestly uninspired kind — is what it looks and sounds like.

In a newspaper interview published Friday, Valentin P. Kasat-kin, the Soviet ambassador to Thailand, called for renewed attempts to negotiate an end to the Cambodian conflict.

The analysts said that the Kremlin leadership under Mikhail S. Gorbachev wanted the Soviet Union to play a bigger role in eco-nomic activities of the Asia-Pacific area, where growth rates have been among the highest in the world.

They said Moscow also wanted to gain political acceptability and influence with the majority of nonsocialist states in the region.

But Moscow continues to find its quest for closer political ties with ASEAN blocked by its extensive military aid and diplomatic support for Vietnam's military presence in Cambodia. ASEAN officials describe the

These have not been democracy's finest days in Ecuador. On Friday, air force commandos scized President León Febres Cordero at gunpoint, holding him until he secured the release of an air force general imprisoned for attempted coup-making. Now the newly released president is threatened with impeachment for infractions against the constitution and the na-tional honor. Old-fashioned machismo reigns supreme all around. Another new democracy is shown to be just one step ahead of traditional military meddling.

Like its neighbors, Ecuador knows that tradition well, and not just in politics. Ecuador's armed forces have played an important role in the country's economic development. Recent military regimes advanced overdue land reform and promoted development of petroleum resources. The juntas of the 1970s espoused a moderate leftism, spiced with a populist preference for rapid development. They turned back power to civilians voluntarily, and perhaps, in the thinking of some officers, reserved a right to intervene yet again. In 1984, Mr. Febres Cordero, a flamboyant conservative millionaire and apostle of austerity, won a narrow election. For much of his term, opposition parties have controlled the congress. Legislative provoca-tions and executive high-handedness have fed on each other, escalating dangerously. The opposition has the votes in impeach him, but probably not enough to convict.

Washington and Latin democracies rightly express outrage at Mr. Febres Cordero's kidnapping. Democracy's progress in South America is too important to all concerned to subject it to such hot-headed power plays. It will not be more than temporarity scenre until civilians learn how to take over not just the formal machinery of governments, but also the responsibility for economic and political development that Latin militaries have long asserted as the natural basis for their political role.

Beijing Hits the Brake

The Chinese leadership has now amplified its reasons for abruptly sacking Hu Yaobang from the top party post. According to his acting successor as party general secretary he had, quite simply, sought to push the pace of political reform too fast.

The catalogue of other errors includes his flirtation with "bourgeois liberalism," for which read Western modes of political behavior, and his relaxed attitude to the student demonstrations. But these are all subsumed in the main charge and they pose the eternal problems of a static regime which tries to reform itself: What is the correct pace, and are not the arguments about it really about whether reforms should be taken any further at all? The conflict in the Politburo has been going on for some time. It was the students who brought it to a head, and the man alleged to have goaded them on, Fang Lizhi, has been dismissed from the party. In China, as Elsewhere, People Are Born With Rights

This is the second of two articles from a lecture given at Jiaotong University in November. Mr. Fang is a former vice president at the University of Science and Technology in Hefei. His expulsion from the Communist Party was announced on Monday.

this mean that if the top leadership lacks resolve, society would stop moving forward?

Of course, the nature of the Chinese system and the traditional morals and values determine that the top leadership plays a very important role. But the problem is that by relying only on the resolve of the top leadership, China cannot hope to become a developed country. If the democracy we are strivous ideas. To go further, democracy itself embodies the recognition of individual rights. The society is composed of individuals. This means rights" is taboo in China. In fact it is a very popular term. It simply means that men are born with rights in live, to marry, to think, to receive an education, and so on.

We should think of human rights, liberty, equality and love as a positive historical legacy. We should first affirm this legacy and then strive for democracy. Until then there is no true democracy. We should not place our hope on grants from the top leadership. Democracy granted from above is not democracy in a real sense. It is relaxation of control.

Only by striving can we get what we really need. Because of the extremely long history of feudal society in China, plus the wide spread of feudal ideas as a result of the Cultural Revolution, there have emerged many errone-tus ideas. Take for instance the relationship.

what the government has given us, as it is we who have maintained the government.

The first issue that needs to be clarified is: Who provides whom? Students are told that they should study hard and value the opportunity that the party has governed them. But tunity that the party has granted them. But to say that the right to education is granted by the leadership is a feudalistic viewpoint. In appearance everything seems to have been appearance everything seems to have been granted by the government; in reality, it is not the case. From an economic point of view, every citizen pays taxes. And these taxes include the expenses for education. So the opportunity of education is not "granted."

In the developed countries the concept is that citizens are taxpayers to maintain the government. In return, the government uses the taxes to manager things in the interest of the taxes to manage things in the interest of citizens. Out of this relationship, the psychological feelings of the taxpayers are that it is the citizens who maintain the government. The government can survive only by levying taxes. As a result, the government must serve the citizens. It is not so much whether citizens are permitted to be educated as it is the government that has the responsibility to run schools for citizens. So, too, in China.

Every one of us has paid our taxes.

The decisive factor in determining the sta-bility of peoples' lives and the development of the society has in whether the intellectuals as a group have the awareness of democracy and of themselves to conscientiously strive for

of themselves to conscientiously strive for their rights. It would be tragic if we did not have this awareness and simply waited for the leadership for their determination.

When I was abroad, I often explained to foreign friends the tragic experience of Chi-nese intellectuals during the Cultural Revolu-tion: The doors of universities were closed and intellectuals were deprived of rights. These friends then expressed their sympathy, but they were a little contemptoons of Chi-nese intellectuals, asking me. Why did you nese intellectuals, asking me: Why did you fail to express your will? Why didn't you demonstrate that you were against, and the the Cultural Revolution?

During the 1950s, idealism prevailed among Chinese intellectuals. That was value able. But that generation was strongly infinenced by the doctrine of obodience. No man ter how they were treated, they would work? hard without protest.

This attitude is not conducive to our social ety. One should strive for what is one's due. It is time that we changed the characteristics of the intellectuals of the 1950s.

is time that we changed the characteristics of the intellectuals of the 1950s.

Were China in have another Cultural Review olution, f hope that we would not become the object of sympathy and then be asked; Why have you put yourself in this dilemma again? It would be tragic if China were to report this cycle. The intellectuals should denomate the strength they possess.

As long as one has the awareness and speaks out in crincism, the effects will be greatly felt. People have been deeply impressed by this awareness since the latter half of 1935. Wasn't it true that a small action would lead to strong reaction nationwide? This proves that we have strength. But the question remains whether you dare to use it. For the Sake of Peace, Maputo Merits Support

MAPUTO, Mozambique — A se-nior Mozambican official answered the general question about his country's direction with a wry smile. What you in the West used to say about us was never quite right," he said, "and what you're saying now isn't quite right either."

The implication was that despite appearances, Mozambique did not really plunge into the Soviet sphere and model itself after the Russians when it gained independence from Portugal in 1975, and that it has not totally flip-flopped now. But there have been changes — toward an ea-ger opening to the West, much-need-ed but painful economic reforms, and a desperate struggle for survival in a dangerous neighborhood.

This sprawling country of 14 million, stretched along the east coast of Africa from the South African border to Tanzania, is another example of the complex forces at play in the area and the folly of snap judgments in distant Washington. The Mozambicans' prime concerns, as in most of Africa, are to maintain indepen-dence, create a nation within the borders inherited from the colonial past, and mobilize an untrained, hungry population to work for development.

Samora Machel, died with many of his cabinet members in the crash of his plane in South Africa last year. Whatever the investigators finally report, many people here will never stop suspecting a plot. But the succes-sion has gone remarkably smoothly, and all indications are that President Joaquim Chissano, formerly foreign minister, is determined to carry on Mr. Machel's latter-day policies of reform and search for balance.

The guerrillas call themselves Ren-amo, the National Resistance Movement. They have disrupted an already devastated economy though they do not seem able to control territory, only to increase the economic dependence of Mozambique and its landlocked neighbors on South Africa.

Mr. Machel sought to reduce the threat to the U.S.-brokered Nkomati Agreement of March 1984, in which Mozambique promised to stop the use of its territory for African National Congress attacks against South Alrica, in return for a please fro Pretoria to stop helping Renamo. ft is now evident that South Africa did not stop. One proof is that while Renamo claims that its equipment is all captured from government forces, it has much better communications and, apparently, transport facilities than the government ever had. But Mr. Chissano says he will contime to respect Nkomati, partly because it makes clear "the source of the conflict in southern Africa," part-because he considers that it still deters the South Africans from open aggression with their own forces, as they have done in Angola to the west. Meanwhile, in an ironic reversal of tactics, the government is trying to learn what it can about putting down guerrillas from those with experience the Portugues French, even the United States, though the U.S. Congress has refused the logistical, noncombat aid that the Mozambicans need.

WASHINGTON — The wild dates a not-so-subtle threat first made by Mr. Baker last June: If the

The weapons come from the Russians and their allies, and of course Mozambique is glad to accept. But that has not tied the Mozambicans to Moscow, after all, and ideology is being diluted now. Top officials talk openly of "mis-takes" made by the regime when it set out to organize a country stripped of economic and administrative structures, and of "the disease of radicalism which affects young revolutions." The impression is that the changes are being made because of recognized internal need, not to please or im-press anybody outside, East or West.

It is almost impossible to exagger-ate the problems here, compounded by the terrible drought of 1981-84. But the efforts to make the country work for its own sake, and in cooperation with the region, deserve attention. South Africa is trying to pull it down posing as policeman of the region," as Mr. Chissano says. Mozambique merits support for the sake. of the "peace and interdependence" that is his goal for southern Africa.

Should It Be Iran-Contra-Angola-Gate?

T NVESTIGATORS into the Iran-contra affair may find an African connection. Some profits from the arms sales to Iran may have gone to the rebels of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, led by Jonas Savimbi. He obtained $15 million in military aid during a U.S. visit a year ago. This, along with South African support, has enabled him to keep fighting Angola's Marxist government. But he may also have had secret U.S. aid.

Congressional committees are investigating a fund for Afghan rebels said to contain $500 million in a Swiss bank account. Government sources indicate that this fund may also have been used to support UNITA. If any of this money was sent to UNITA before August 1985, such aid would have broken the law. That is when Congress repealed the Clark Amendment, which, since 1976, had barred aid, overt or covert, to Angola's warring factions.

Illegal aid may have been delivered to Mr. Savimbi by a U.S. airline that flew to and within Angola hundreds of times before Angust 1985 — Southern Air Transport, which also carried out supply missions to the contras. Southern Air apparently has been uniquely able to fly into areas of Angola where UNITA operates. If the planes brought aid to Mr. Savimbi's forces before repeal of the Clark Amendment, it would be a serious breach of law. - Sanford J. Ungar and Arnold Kohen, in The New York Times.

Liberia Through Rose-Tinted Glasses

SECRETARY of State George Shultz praised the brutal regime in Liberia during a visit there this month. The government of President Samuel Doe, he said, is making "genuine progress" toward democracy. There has been a return to a government produced out of an election, and there is freedom of the press." That is a gross distortion.

Almost from the moment President Doe seized power in 1980, his soldiers have been a law unto them-selves, responsible for looting, arson, flogging and arbitrary arrests. Witnesses have described horrific brutality, including castration and dismemberment of suspected rebels.

Perhaps Mr. Shultz wished to encourage a friendly country where the United States has a huge investment Unfortunately, he chose to highlight three areas in which Liberia has an especially egregious record.

He said the 1985 election was "quite open" and the "only question" was about "the vote counting process." The election was judged fraudulent by nearly all independent observers. Two opposition parties were barred from participating, and promment opposition leaders were jailed. A military edict effectively outlawed criticism of the government

Mr. Shultz's assertion that there is a free press is bewildering, Journalists have been among the most fre-quent victims of President Doe. Under martial law, journalists were arrested, jailed without charge and physically abused. A new constitution has brought little improvement. In November 1985, a broadcast journalist, Charles Gbenyon, was beyo-neted to death while in the custody of the executive mansion guard.

Secretary Shultz lauded "genuine progress" toward democracy. In fact, official actions have suppressed po-litical dissent. Opposition parties have been barred, at gumpoint, from staging public rallies.

Mr. Shultz's remarks undermine U.S. interests by casting America as an apologist for an empopular regime. A year ago, both houses of Congress passed nonbinding resolutions calling for a suspension of secu-rity aid until free elections are held. Now may be the time for Congress to make those resolutions binding.

A New Slant On Apartheid By Colin Legum

From Moscow,

LONDON —A leading Soviet the oresician has called for a peaceful resolution of the conflict in South Africa and has said that the struggle against apartheid, in its present stage, is not irreversible. More remarkably, he advocates far-reaching compromises to make it easier for the white minority to abandon apartheid and

These views come from a report to the Soviet-African Conference of Peace, Cooperation and Social Pro-gress in Moscow by Gleb Staru-shenko, a corresponding member of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, His report contains five suggestions that. in some respects, come closer to the views of President Pieter Boths than to the African National Congress or the South African Communist Party.

He endorses "the program of the anti-racist forces" for not insisting on "a broad nationalization of capitalist property," and lauds the readiness of those forces "to give the bourgeoisic the necessary guarantees, Second, he suggests that the ANC work out comprehensive guarantees for the white population that could be implemented after the elimination" of spartheid. Such guarantees, he says, would suit white liberals while neutralizing hard-liners. His third suggestion is the most remarkable: the idea of a Parliament of two chambers -- one based on proportional representation, the other with the right of veto based ou equal representation of all four major racial communities. This is close to proposals made by Botha advisers. Mr. Starushenko points to Kenya and Zimbabwe as countries where whites have been made to feel safe after independence. These countries, he says, show what might be achieved in South Africa by offering guarantees to the white and other minorities. His fourth proposal is that the post-apartheid state might involve a unitary system with "autonomous components." The form and substance of such autonomy would be defined only after referenda, negotiapeople's will would be known.

Issues related to the functioning of such a system might be dealt with by a conference involving the government and the "true representatives" of the nonwhite population.

tions and consultations, so that the

Finally, Mr. Starushenko suggesti that a peaceful solution in South Africa might be expedited through international guarantees, with each party selecting guarantors from among prestigious international organizations or individual states. Mr. Starusbenko disagrees with those who cannot imagine a multiracial society existing in the modern world without discrimination and serious contradictions.

His proposals make sense in terms of Soviet Marxist analysis of the situation. Mr. Starushenko sees a twostage struggle: Only after the "libera-tion struggle" has ended apartheid can the struggle for the "national democratic revolution" begin.

Whatever his motives, this approach appears positive — for it discourages the notion that the deadlock can be broken only by increasing the level of revolutionary violence.

This group is made up of the Establishment men and women who have written speeches for presidents during the last eight administrations. It is named after the first White House speechwriter, Judson Welliver, who was responsible for the reputation for eloquence held by Calvin Coolidge.

The ghostly society has conservative window dressing like the Eisenhower writer Bryce Harlow and the Nixonian Ray Price, but its roster is shot through

This column was distributed before an announcement by Patrick J. Buchan-announcement by Patrick J. Buchan-an on Tuesday that he would not run for the presidency. "Having explored this matter for several weeks," he said in a statement reported by United Press International, "I reluctantly yield to the argument that a Buchanan candidacy hunched in the near future would fractionate and embitter, not unite, the leadership and rank and file unite, the leadership and rank and file of the conservative cause," with such known liberals as Clark Clifford, Richard Goodwin, Harry McPher-son and Arthur Schlesinger Jr. In the besmearments of a primary campaign, it would be leaked that Pat Buchanan has supped with the likes of these people.

Why do I rat on my old Nixon colleague this way? Because President Reagan's combative (no story can be written about Pat Buchanan without the adjective "combative") director of communications is thinking about seeking the Republican nomination in 1988.

if a Buchanan candidacy were to develop, he could expect no quarter from the left, whose direct-mail fund-raisers are in desperate need of a bete noire not wearing a marine uniform - or from the far right, which insists on the most rigid standards of associational as well as ideological purity. And pure is the word for Pat, if your definition of conservatism looks to its traditionalist rather than libertarian roots.

In the Nixon years, he was the coiner of such phrases as "instant analysis" and "the new federalism" and emerged from Watergate not only unbesmirched but strengthened. Pat was also the brains behind many of the alliterative barbs of Vice President Spiro Agnew ("pusil-lanimous pussylooters" and "vicars of vacillation" were Pat Buchanan's: "nattering nabobs of negativism" was mine) and he survived the fall of that In the Reagan fall from grace, he has sallied out from the White House bun-

WASHINGTON — Far be it from ker to lash back at this administration's tormentors and to castigate its sunshine soldiers. His friends fear that Pat - as civil in private as he is savage in public has become type-cast in this role on the ever-burning deck. Should he run for president? The argument for taking the plunge is that he would galvanize and bring out the True Believers, ignite a nationdebate with a mediagenic version "a choice, not an echo," and polarize the opposition.

The argument against is practical: It would further split "the Movement's" ranks. Former Schator Jack Kemp, who has a chance of winning a national election, now has much of the activist right's support, but some of that strength may be drained by the televangelist Pat Robertson. A Buchanan crusade would un-dercut Mr. Kemp, which is why Vice President George Bush and Senator Bob Dole are hoping Pat will dive in.

As he prepares to leave the White House, Pat Buchanan is asking himself if his candidacy would serve the right or split and wreck it. At 48, his lifetime spent in advocacy, he does not want to be the instrument delivering the nomination to a pallid centrist, or be the one who denies the Republican right a nominee with a fighting chance of winning the election.

From here on the sidelines, I can say the more the merrier. At the start, let srs. Bush, Dole and Kemp be joined by Howard Baker, Alexander Haig Jeane Kirkpatrick, Pat Buchanan, Pierre du Pont, Donald Rumsfeld and as many ministers-in-makeup as feel the call. The political spectrum is not as neatly calibrated as psephologists say; in the cruci-ble of the primaries, leadership can be forged and a party reinvigorated. If a Buchanan platform features a genuine flat tax, an end to farm subsidies and a pullout from the United Nations, let us examine his ideas.

But most people in "the Movement" today are not on the sidelines. Between the time of Barry Goldwater and the era of Ronald Reagan, a sea change has taken place in conservative bosoms: The death wish has been replaced by the win wish. The right is not fated to sink gloriously with principles uncompro-mised; its activists seek a true-enough believer who turns them on without turning everybody else off.

My hunch is that Pat will take a provocative look around and then disap-point the effete corps of salivating editorialists. He may decide he can do more to advance the Movement on the air than on the hustings.

multibillion-dollar loans to samurai

America remind me of what happened

من الأمل

T OKYO — Japan's heavy export of capital to the United States, in loans and direct investment, reminds me of Gohei Zeniya, a wealthy 19th century merchant ruined by his debtors.

Zeniya amassed a fortune from coastal shipping and became banker to the Kaga fief, making huge loans to the clan government and samurai officials. In 1849 he was authorized to drain and reclaim marshes for commercial development, but local fishermen objected.

When fish in the marshes suddenly died, Zeniya was accused of poisoning them to forestall opposition. The mer-chant and his family were arrested by the Kaga authorities. Zeniya died in prison as a result of torture, one son and a chief clerk were executed, and the fiel confiscated his entire fortune. All debts to the trader were canceled.

The incident remains shrouded in mystery to this day. The standard interpretation is that Zeniya and his family were set up because Kaga fief could not repay its staggering debts. It was not uncommon for indebted samurai to ruin merchanis they owed money to. Japan has a $90 billion surplus in $33 hillion a year to America through purchase of U.S. Treasury notes and public bonds. And it has a net overseas credit balance of about $130 billion. The U.S. trade deficit in 1985 reached an all-time high of $148.5 billion. Forced to borrow extensively from Ja-pan and other countries, Washington debt is expected to reach $1 trillion. Japan has only limited, defensive armed forces; the United States is a $100 hillion. By the 1990s, U.S. external military superpower. Merchant Japan's to Zeniva. Of course, the United States would not stoop to such dirty tactics. Still, I can't help having misgivings. In the 19th century, Britain amassed enormous trade surpluses, and then exported capital. The United States did the same earlier in this century. Both made loans in their own currency and both were dominant military powers. Japan is at double risk. It lacks the armed might to back up its new creditor

status, and it lends in dollars, not yen, which makes the loans and investments vulnerable to devaluation. Such business practices are only warranted if we have complete trust "in the justice and faith of the peace-loving peoples of the world." Those famous words are from the U.S.-inspired postwar constitution.

We live in cramped housing, toil like workaholics and put 18 percent of our international trade. It loans more than income into savings. Because the domestie economy does not offer attractive investment opportunities, huge amounts of capital flow overseas. Our transformation into a creditor nation has been marked by bitter trade disputes with the United States. God only knows whether these loans will be fully repaid.

The Japanese government talks con-stantly about reducing the budget deficit now owes foreign creditors more than and restoring "fiscal soundness." The Nakasone government is trying to freeze most public spending and curtail gov-ernment bond issues. It is n commendable goal, but in present circumstances payments surpluses and capital outflow. The more the government puts its financial house in order, the more the private sector will invest in America. The banking and investment community will shift from Japanese government bonds to U.S. Treasury notes. Which is preferable for the national economy? With present policy, the Japanese government is like the person who cleans up his yard by throwing the trash into his neighbor's yard and then hrags about being a responsible home owner. A healthy economy requires hrisk domestic demand, not cutbacks in government spending. Much needs to be done in Japan, yet public works projects go unfunded and the people's savings are invested in U.S. Treasury notes! Talk about voodoo economies. Am I crazy, or is it the people who chant "fiscal soundness" who are deluded?

I am not advocating massive pump priming to stimulate domestic demand I favor privatization of the national railways, reduction of the subsidy paid to rice growers, and higher fees for national health insurance programs.

But the government has clamped a ceiling on all spending except defense and foreign aid. This is counterproductive. Policy makers must discard shibboleths and take a fresh look at Japan's dilemma. Zeniya surely wished he had reassessed that reclamation project.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Marxism and the Market

Some of the articles you have published on changes in Soviet society un-der the new leadership raise valid points, though most of them are animated by a desire for a "de-communization" of the regime. I do not myself discern any evidence whatsoever that the foundation of the Soviet state — its system of ownership — is likely to be affected.

What I do observe, as a Soviet citizen living in the West, is the initiation of long-term policies designed to democratize society so that every citizen can have a say in the running of the state. People's attitudes change slowly, hat this change will occur in the U.S.S.R. Its rate will depend on how people respond to the call for greater effort and discipline, but also on material incentives coupled with a moral regeneration of life, the opportunity for public discourse, and the presence of external stability.

In my opinion, one of the most effective instruments for improving society (both national and international) is the strengthening of the rule of law. Ronald Tiersky, in "Can the U.S.S.R. Alone Be Unchanging?" (Jan. 6), asks: "Could a rule-of-law system be built up from in-side communism?" This is precisely what I believe is happening.

New laws are being enacted and published for all to read. Without wishing to idealize the situation, I expect that strict enforcement will tend to constrain bureaucratic arbitrariness, which has been a real curse. Administrative rules are likely to be increasingly derived from, and anchored in, legal dispositions.

Mr. Tiersky is concerned about the liberty under the Soviet system "to buy, sell and produce," Such a "liberty" has long existed with respect to the disposal by the individual members of collective farms of the produce of their small pri-vately managed plots at market prices in the city "bazaars." Now the trend is for the collective farms themselves to sell their surpluses to the towns at lower market prices, economically a much more sensible arrangement, and one which seems to work.

Other outlets for private initiative glected service sector. Market-oriented arrangements, combined with decentralization and greater autonomy for enterprises, can be expected to bring efficiency to the economy, help regulate consumers' choices and provide flexibility in foreign trade operations, including joint ventures with capitalist firms.

The elevation of the market to the status of superarbiter has become an article of absolute faith among some economists and politicians in the Western world. Surely the many able and knowledgeable Western analysts of So-viet affairs must realize that this kind of market ideology and reality is alien to, and inconsistent with, the Soviet system.

Not Much of a Party

I was perplexed by "Can Wall Street's Biggest-Ever Party Continue?" (Jan. 5), hy John Crudele. Naturally, the person who bought Dow Jones shares is better off than the person who left dollars in a have been legitimized, mainly in the ne- liquid account. But if you reason as a Calculations based on movements in currency rates would prohably show that for New York to and educators who have been pawns in bave the same performance as other stock exchanges, the Dow Jones index would have to be above 2,500, "Biggestever party"? Rather, for a citizen of the world, a bad year in New York.

Pawns With Noble Motives

Mike Royko, in the opinion column 'Against the Yellow Ribbon Syndrome" (Dec. 2), proposed that the United States "stop assuming responsibility for private citizens who choose to expose themselves" to danger. Peter Adams (Letters, Dec. 12) took it one step further, stating that "Americans who insist

However, it is disconcerting that if I were to become the victim of a terrorist kidnapping, it would likely be in retaliation for misguided U.S. policies to which I have never subscribed. The clergymen Lebanon were doing more to promote friendship and genuine American inter-ests than any U.S. government official. If Mr. Adams should find himself on a hijacked airliner in possession of the wrong passport, is this what he deserves? MARK HENDERSON.

Ellen Goodman's opinion column After a Disaster, the Blame Goes to All but the Humans" (Meanwhile, Jan. 14), was excellent, as they almost always are. I wish you would carry her columns more often. BARRY CHILDERS. BARRY CHILDERS.

In some of today's top hotels, Philips five star technology increases efficiency and further enhances guest facilities. For example, at the beautiful Al Bustan Palace hotel-operated by Intercontinental Hotels Corporation - in Oman, for which we supplied a number of special technical systems.

Ranging from computerised telephony and room management, through guest room communications and audio/video programme distribution, right up to complete congress and lighting systems.

In many cases we tailored our systems to meet this hotel's own, exacting requirements. And our project management skills ensured that completion was right on schedule.

Equally impressive are the extensive communication services at the New Sheraton Hotel and Conference Centre in Harare, Zimbabwe and in many major hotels in the Far East.

Philips-five star technology for hotels.

In Singapore's new and prestigious Raffles City business complex, the 73-storey Westin Stamford and its twintowered 28-storey sister hotel, the Westin Plaza, use our lighting, television, video, sound and communication systems to enhance comfort and service for hotel residents and guests.

The systems also extend into the Raffles City office tower, conference centre and shopping arcade. Why Philips? Firstly, capability. As a multi-technology company we are proficient in many hotel disciplines.

Secondly, reputation. Our clientele includes world famous hotel chains such as: Hilton Intl., Holiday Inn, Intercontinental Corp., Mandarin Oriental, Oberoi, Penta, Shangri-La Intl., Sheraton Corp., Trust House Forte, etc. Reasons enough for hotels to have no reservations about our expertise.

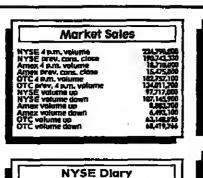

Philips. The sure sign of expertise worldwide.

Dow Sets Record for Daily Gains

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones industrial average scored a small gain Tuesday to record an unprecendented 13-day winning streak.

Trading was the seventh-busiest ever as the

The Dow, which finished above 2,100 for the first time Monday, closed up 1.97 to 2,104.47. Since the beginning of the year, blue chips have risen 208 points. Advances led declines marginally among the 2,016 issues traded. Volume was about 226.55 million, up from 162.83 million on Monday.

Prices rose in heavy trading of American Stock Exchange issues

"It is difficult to produce any fundamental reason for the run," William Lefevre of Advest Inc. said. "This market is just feeding on itself and it is going up because it is going up. However, the erratic price moves today indicate that the market is becoming fatigued."

The market made a major price swing during the morning, shortly after IBM reported a 48.2 percent drop in fourth quarter net earnings to $1.39 billion and its first back-to-back yearly carnings decline in 55 years.

The report caused IBM to fall 2½ points to 122¾, and overall stock prices, up nearly 14 points in the first half-hour of trading, were trading at a 6-point deficit shortly after the announcement. "The Street was looking for about $2.40 to

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

All Work, No Play Becoming Resigns at The New Way in Europe

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

International Herald Tribune

ONDON - With the internationalization of financial markets in London and the introduction of new financial products in Paris, European executives are working longer hours. Increased international competition along with opportunities to make more money are starting to change European business from a nine-to-five culture to an around-the-clock one.

According to a recent survey of 112 British financial institutions by MORI, the London polling organization, 36 percent of financial managers said only worksholics could succeed. Of those surveyed, 73 percent said they worked more than 46 hours a week, 44 percent said they worked more than 50 hours, and 23 percent said they worked more than 55 hours.

The London Stock Exchange now opens at 9 A.M., an hour earlier than before. Chemical Bank in Londoo is planning to install nap rooms for late-staying bankers. City law firms maintain 24-hour clerical and sec-"Power breakfasting is part of Le Look, like driving a BMW with

He earns a six-figure salary, has a house in the smart Cheisea neighborhood and a cottage in the Cotswolds, skis in Switzerland twice a year and shoots. Mr. Tonssaint, a graduate of the prestigious Ecole Nationale d'Administration, works 12-hour days and rarely sees his children during the week. Once the right schools and the right connections were enough to ensure success, he said. But today, "you have to earn everything you get."

On a typical trip, Mr. D'Janoeff would fly from London to New York on a Tuesday evening, continue on to Chicago and Milwaukee, and return to London by 9 A.M. on Thursday to be ready with a proposal by that afternoon, the start of the American business day.

"Power breakfasting is part of Le Look," said Marc Lamy, with Korn Ferry International, the executive search firm. Favorite spots include the Crillon, Bristol and Plazz Athenée hotels. "Breakfast meetings are reflec-tive of an upmarket lifestyle just like driving a BMW equipped with a car phone and hunting in Sologne on the weekend."

In London, fashionable restaurants such as Chez Gerard are now open for breakfast and High Table Ltd., a caterer for investment banks, says its Clients often request that meal. Even the staid Institute of Directors in London has started a breakfast service for its members.

But some very successful hard-working European managers are not about to stretch their business days to from dawn past dusk.

"I never have breakfast meetings in London," said Jennifer d'Abo, the energetic chairman of Ryman Group, the British retailing group. "Early morning is the only quiet time of the day when the phones don't ring and I can catch up with correspondence and reading." Mrs. d'Abo said she only sets up business breakfasts when she is traveling in the United States. Others warn that long hours aren't the only measure or means to success. Said Mr. D'Janoeff, "It's what people produce that matters."

Guinness Case Claims 2 More

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches LONDON - The chief executive of Morgan Grenfell Group PLC and a director have resigned as a result of the scandal surrounding Guinness PLC, the investment bank announced Tuesday.

Christopher Reeves, the chief ex-ecutive and deputy chairman of the board, and Graham Walsh, a board member and head of corporate finance, stepped down after an inter-nal inquiry into the firm's role during the controversial Guinness bid for Distillers Co. last year. Morgan Grenfell acted as Guinness's financial adviser in the takeover battle.

The giant brewer admitted last week that it illegally repurchased its own stock through Switzerland's Bank Len, apparently to raise its price and improve its chances of defeating a rival bidder, Argyll Group PLC, for Distillers. Guinness's bid was in stock and cash.

Morgan Grenfell said the latest resignations were "in light of breaches of established procedures and policies which were identified in the course of ... the internal

The resignations continued what has become London's worst financial scandal in years. It began in December when government in-spectors from the Department of Trade and Industry began investi-gating Guinness's conduct in its £2.7 billion bid ($4.1 billion at current exchange rates) for Distillers.

A Morgan Grenfell takeover specialist, Roger Seelig, resigned Dec. 31. A member of a separate board f the unit Morgan Grenfell & Co., Mr. Seelig represented Guinness during the Distillers battle.

Other casualties included Guinness's chairman and chief executive, Ernest Saunders, who was dismissed last week. In addition, Olivier Roux, a Guinness director for finance, has resigned along with another Saunders associate, Arthur Fürer, the chairman of Bank Leu. The Guinness board also asked a director, Thomas Ward, to resign.

Morgan Grenfell said Tuesday it had formed an interim committee to manage the firm under the direction of Sir Peter Carey, an execu-tive director. (AP, Reuters)

The Swiss Banking Commission said it would examine whether Bank Leu's purchase of nearly 5 percent of Guinness's stock last year was legal, Renters reported from Bern on Tuesday. The commission said Bank Leu would be asked to present all necessary documents and provide further infor-mation for the examination.

Slide in Japan

Despite the Dollar's Decline

About Prices

By Jonathan Peterson Los Angeles Times Service LOS ANGELES — Bob

Miller, a vice president of Radio Shack, recalls the jintery days at the company last year as the Japanese yen soured higher and higher on international markets while the dollar sank like a rock.

"I was panicked," said the executive of the retailer, which relies on low priced appelling from lies on low-priced suppliers from Japan and other countries for the electronic gadgets it sells throughout the United States. "We were just devastated. We didn't know what would happen - but not very much did hap-

U.S. executives and govern ment officials expected the higher-valued yen to make products from Japan much more expensive, thereby giving import-bat-tered U.S. factories a boost.

Consumers would find it cheaper to buy American. Com-panies that had benefited from inexpensive Japanese products —like Tandy Corp., which owns Radio Shack — would bear part of the burden. According to the textbooks, it had to happen. Bot it has not.

The experience at Radio Shack, where Japanese price increases on semi-coodoctors, parts have been relatively insignificant, symbolizes a painful lesson only now being absorbed by U.S. industry: International competition in the 1980s has become so ferocious that foreign producers are prepared to slash their profits - even swallow losses - to keep their customers.

They also are tightening their belts and producing products at even more competitive prices. What this means is that selling

U.S.-made products at home and abroad is a tougher challenge than many envisioned. As a result, the widely held view that a weaker dollar can cure America's imbalance in trade with Japan and other nations is now being questioned, even as the dollar plunges on world markets. "It's like grabbing the horn stop a bull," said Gilbert Benz, an economist with A. Gary Shilling & Co. in New York. A Department of Commerce trade analyst acknowledged that the Reagan administration's currency policy has yielded disappointing results so far.

"To be hooest, we really haven't seen a lot of improve ment yet," the analyst said. "We're finding that things don't work the way economic theory says they should."

The theory is simple enough.

As a nation's correccy rises in value internationally, the products of that nation cost more for foreigners to buy. When a currency falls, the opposite hap-

So, while it may seem that a weak dollar is a bad thing for Americans, it does not have to be. In theory, at least, it means that U.S. products can be sold more cheaply — and more easily — throughout the world.

IBM Says Profit Plunged 48.2% In 4th Period

ARMONK, New York - Intersaid Tuesday that its fourth-quarter net income plunged 48.2 per-cent to $1,39 billion, much more sharply than had been expected. It added that it saw "oo definitive sign of demand improvement in worldwide business operations about long-term prospects for itself and the industry. lo the final 1985 quarter, IBM earned $2.68 billion, or $4.36 a share.

The poor fourth-quarter earnings, equal to $2.28 a share, forced down annual net for the second consecutive year, the first back-toback decline since the 1930s.

IBM said it earned $4.79 billioo, or $7.81 a share, last year, off 27 percent from 1985 earnings of $6.56 billion, or $10.67 a share.

Revenue for the quarter fell about 1.2 percent to $16.95 billion from $17.16 billion a year earlier. Analysts' predictions of IBM's fourth-quarter earnings had fallen steadily in recent weeks to an average $2.61 a share. But the actual figure was worse than almost anyone had expected.

In fact IBM's stock jumped $5.25 a share Monday on speculation that forecasts had been too pessimistic. The bad news set back the entire Dow Jones industrial average for a short time Tuesday. IBM slid $2.25 to $123 in active trading on the

New York Stock Exchange. Analysts said that in addition to weak capital spending among IBM's biggest customers, the company has been pummeled by other personal computer makers and by competition in the midrange from Digital Equipment Corp.

As IBM has floundered, DEC's fortunes have soared. Just last week, it announced a 98 percent jump in net income for its second fiscal quarter to $270 million.

"1986 was a difficult year for IBM." John F. Akers, the chairman, conceded, and he blamed the problems on "sluggish capital derating economic performance in some non-U.S. countries, and unsatisfactory levels of demand for parts of our product line."

Iceland May Merge 2 Banks

REYKIAVIK — Iceland is considering merging Utvegsbanki Islands, the government-owned bank specializing in loans to the fishing industry, with another nationalized bank, after talks aimed at selling it to two private banks broke down. Prime Minister Steingrimur Hermannsson said Tuesday. He said the likely merger partner would be Bunadarbanki, an agricultural lender, and that the merged bank would be privatized.

Honda Says Net Declined 49.4% In 3d Quarter

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche TOKYO — Honda Motor Co. reported Tuesday a 49.4 percent decline in net income in the third quarter of its business year ended in November. The company blamed the yen's steep appreciation for most of the fall. Honda said its net profit in the third quarter dropped to 17.15 billion yen ($112.8 mil-lion) on sales of 655.34 billion yen, down 0.2 percent. It also reported that sales in the first three quarters of the business year declined 3 percent to 2.099 trillion yen and that net income dropped 45.5 percent to 63.47 billion yen. Revenues from overseas automobile sales rose to 342.2 billion yen from 299.7 billion the year before. But overseas revenues calculated in yen declined 7.4 percent because of the currency's rise. Motorcycle revenue also fell and the company blamed slacker sales in Japan because of a law requiring many motorcy-clists to wear crash belinets, BTR does not have any glass-making operations, and the offer, which was announced Nov. 20 and priced below Pilkington's market value, did not raise antitrust con-

But critics said it posed "public COMPANY NOTES interest" conflicts.

Pilkington, which employs workers in the economically depressed north of England, has a reputation for performing community service. BTR has been portrayed by its critics as an asset-stripper interested only in short-term profits.

BTR effectively had offered 545 pence for each of Pilkington's shares. Many investors had been expecting a higher offer, either from BTR or another bidder.

When BTR made its bid in November, it said its philosophy and. management style would improve the performance of Pilkington, which reported that pretax profit for the year ended March 31 dipped 9 percent, to £105.8 million.

BTR has acquired Dunlop Holdings PLC and Nylex Corp., an Australian polymers company, in the past two years.

After Pilkington's share price jumped 20 pence in heavy volume on Jan. 14, the London Stock Exchange said it would investigate. Official clearance of the bid came the next day, and the stock climbed a further 34 pence to close

Lagerfeld and Revillon Sign Accord On Worldwide Marketing, Licensing

PARIS - The designer Karl Lagerfeld and Revillon SA, the French fur, accessories and perfume concern, announced Tuesday a worldwide licensing and marketing partnership for all Lagerfeld activities apart from perfumes. No financial details were disclosed.

Mr. Lagerfeld is best known as the designer for the house of Chanel, as well as collections under his own name and the Fendi name in Italy. as well as collections under his own name and he reant name in Italy.

Until three months ago he had a licensing agreement with Bidermann Industries USA Inc., an American company, signed when he ended his 20-year association with the house of Chloe in 1984.

He said he had terminated his three-year agreement with Bidermann early and "by mutual consent." He said his first venture for Revillon would be a fur collection under his name next year.

Revillon's parent company, Cora-Revillon-Editions Mondiales, is a developer of so-called "hypermarkets," or vast supermarkets, with annual sales of 30 billion francs ($4.9 billion). Mr. Lagerfeld said he would maintain his ventures with Fendi, where he designs furs and ready-to-wear clothing, and with Chanel, where he is responsible for both the ready-to-wear and haute conture

Why shift back and forth among their paper currencies, when you can secure your assets in gold?

World leaders are constantly talking up or talking down their currencies. lt is no wonder. Better than anyone else, politicians know that all currencies, even the strongest" ones, in reality are merely pieces of paper.

Their "value" is no more - or less - than what people think about them at any given moment. Much of this value is psychological, which is why they car: be talk-

International Herald Tribune

BRUSSELS - Jean Gandois, the Frenchman who in 1983-85 reorganized the ailing government-controlled Belgian steel company, Cockerill Sambre SA, will return there as part of an agreement between Belgium and France.

Pechiney, the French government-owned metals group, said Mr. Gandois, 56, would remain its chairman and chief executive while becoming chairman of Cockerill. He will replace Raymond Lévy, 59, now head of Renault, the French car maker. Mr. Levy succeeded Georges Besse, 58, who was shot to death Nov. 17 by terrorists.

Contrary to American hopes, however, the U.S. trade figures with other countries have remained dismal since that agreement at New York's Plaza Hotel.

U.S. consumers continue to indulge their tastes for foreign goods, and U.S. exporters continue to have trouble competing not only with Japan, but also with suppliers from many countries.

The deficit with Japan is of special significance, however, both because of its magnitude and because of Japan's successful challenges to American industry in automobiles, electronics, machine tools and many other areas,

"It's part of an overall picture, although Japan stands ont because it is an extreme," observed Irwin L. ports to Japan.

Keliner, chief economist with Manufacturers Hanover in New York. In 1985, for example, the United States bought about $72.4 billion worth of products from Japan, while selling the Japanese $22.6 billion worth, for a trade deficit of nearly $50 billion, according to the Department of Commerce. The 1986 imbalance is expected to be even larger, in the range of $60 billion. That is the largest single portion of a U.S. trade deficit with the rest of the world, which is likely to exceed $170 billion when the figures for 1986 are added up.

Many specialists still expect a turnaround in 1987. And to be sure, it can take a long time for trading patterns to alter, despite price changes.

But if that is to happen, it is important for U.S. manufacturers to sell more goods to Japan and other nations and for Americans to buy fewer imported products.

Anecdotal evidence suggests at least minor progress for U.S. ex-

Geert Jensen, whose Algert Co. tries, including autos, because of in Los Angeles ships goods interna-tionally, said that he now is moving U.S.-made kitchen cabinets to Japan for the first time in a decade. "Right now, we're selling products in Japan that we haven't sold for years, simply because we weren't competitive," he said.

The big-ticket U.S. items traditionally marketed to Japan include agricultural commodities, factory and office equipment, coal, oil products, chemicals, drugs and planes. In many cases, Japanese import restrictions, however, have stymied U.S. attempts to make further inroads.

Others chastise U.S. industry for failing to be more aggressive in marketing to Japan.

"It was a wonderful opportunity for us to go in there and get a bigger share of the market," said Charles H. Nevil, president of Meridian Group, an export management company in Los Angeles. "And in my estimation, we didn't do it."

Nonetheless, earnings are down sharply in many Japanese industhe yen. And companies are scram-bling to cut costs, frequently relying on suppliers in South Korea, Hong Kong and other offshore locations where the labor is cheaper.

Yet the Japanese are proving their determination to keep customers by restricting price increases to far less than the leap of more than 50 percent in the yen's value since early 1985.

They have boosted prices on automobiles, electronic goods, office equipment and other products. But, with the exception of some specialty retailers, the increases have been small enough to prevent any serious defection of customers.

For instance, prices at Yamaha musical instruments and sporting goods, rose about 10 percent to 12 percent last year, according to a spokesman. "We couldn't possibly go up 50 percent or we wouldn't have any buyers at all," he said.

THE ROPESPINNER CONSPIRA-CY

HE banking system comes under savage assault from two different directions this month — in Paul Erdman's "Panic of '89" and Michael M. Thomas's "Ropespinner Conspira-cy." In each case it survives, but only just. As the author of such novels as "The Crash of "79" and "The Billion Dollar Sure Thing." Erdman is a leading exponent of the block-busting financial melodrama. This time he has set his story some two years from now. The current administration is on its way out, and a newly elected Democratic president is waiting in the wings; meanwhile, the price of oil is plunging and several major Third World governments are threatening to default on their

It is against this troubled background that a group of conspirators converges in an attempt o engineer a devastating run on the banks. Does it matter that the characters in "The Panic of '89" are pure plastic? Not necessarily; the plot — the first consideration in this kind of story - is potentially an exciting one, and it draws on readily aroused fears that it wouldn't take much for the world economy to lurch out of control.

No, the real trouble is Erdman's inability to put his political and economic points across in plausible fictional manner. Instead, he has his money men constantly lecture one another about the ABCs of their trade. The effect is to make everyone in the book talk as though everyone else were slightly slow-witted. "The Ropespinner Conspiracy" is a far more sophisticated piece of work. The story opens in the 1930s, with Soviet intelligence setting out to plant an agent at the very heart of capitalism in order to hasten its destruction from within, Farfetched? Perhaps; but Michael M. Thomas can cite at least a partial precedent from real life, Anthony Blunt's attempt, while he was at Cambridge, to recruit Michael Straight to serve as a future Wall Street mole. (Straight's father had been a partner in Jan. Morgan.) And in any case, Thomas's chief concern in the story is to demonstrate not so much Soviet akuldungery as capitalism's greedy acquiescence in its own doom.

There is a sense of venture moves swirting greedy acquescence in its own doom.

There is a sense of genuine suger swirling around in "The Ropespinner Conspiracy," an anger directed against the contemporary paper economy, the speculators who profit from it and the hankers who (in Thomas's view) have made it possible by shandoning traditional exferenced. The story congraint picture of tensions sufeguards. The story generates plenty of ten-sion, and it is anchored in a strice of welldocumented and well-observed settings.

Kookaburra III Eliminates Australia IV After Bond's Boat Bungles Start of Race

By Sid Moody
The Associated Press

FREMANTLE, Australia -Kookaburra III won the America's Cup defender role Tuesday, eliminating Australia IV and ending syndicate chief Alan Bond's hopes of sailing for the trophy he won from the United States in 1983.

Kookaburra III beat Bond's yacht for the fifth straight time after a bungled start by Australia IV's skipper, Colin Beashel.

Peter Gilmour, who handles the starts on Kookaburra III for helmsman Jain Murray, forced Beachel to circle to avoid hitting the committee boat just before the start. Beashel never recovered from the 36-second deficit and lost the race by 56 seconds. Kookaburra III had no trouble with Australia IV in the light, 12-14 knot winds.

So there will be no replay of the dramatic 4-3 match that brought the cup Down Under from Newport, Rhode Island, when Bond's Australia II beat America's Liberty and belmsman Dennis Conner.

Conner, then skipper for the New York Yacht Club, which had held the cup for 132 years in sport's longest unbeaten streak, made the on a number of occasions and for final Monday by eliminating New Zealand, 4-1. Conner now sails "I couldn't serve or return, and Stars & Stripes for the San Diego suddenly I started to lose my cool," he said. "Then I got had calls. It Yacht Club.

Kookaburra III still has to survive a selection process against Kookaburra II, both owned by Bond's fellow Perth millionaire, Kevin Parry. Kookaburra II had been eliminat-ed in the defender series semifinals, but a Bond-Parry deal with the Royai Perth Yacht Club, which actually holds the cup, stipulated that it be tested against the winner of the best-of-nine defender final.

How the two Kookaburras will be evaluated has not been decided. Australia IV's defeat by a quicker Kookaburra III may be the end date in 1990, when the next challenge can be made, but a defiant declaration made later seemed to contradict the earlier statements. As he was being honored after the race by the Royal Perth Club, Bond congratulated Parry and said, "We won it, Kevin. Don't you lose it." Then, at the club annex in the harbor, he told a large crowd of dockside well wishers: "If Kevin doesn't defend the cup, we'll go and get it back for you." At a joint news conference later, Parry retorted that "I don't think Pinnin Zurbriggen skied to his 24th World Cup victory Tuesday, team-ing with Joël Gaspoz for a 1-2 Swiss sweep ahead of Swedish veteran In-gernar Stemmark in a giant slalom.

Zurbriggen, the World Cup lead-er, made the best first run on a tightly set 52-gate course with a 1,241-foot (376-meter) drop. He overcame minor slips in the top part of the second run for a win-ning total of 2 minutes, 33.82 sec-onds. It was his sixth victory this season and a repeat of his triumph

Gaspoz, winner of the slalom at Wengen on Saturday, missed get-ting his fourth victory this season

Defending World Cup champion Marc Girardelli of Luxembourg dropped out of the second run after placing only 11th in the first.

It Is Time to Turn Off the Television And Get Back to Real Refereeing

LONDON — High noon in Puebla, an everyday cture of sporting conflict during the World Cup in

You are looking at a national hero accepting with mock surprise the lecturing of a referee whose role is to behave as anonymously as possible. A ferocious rainstorm seems to east a plague on both their houses.

But that is unfair. The Italian referee, Lingi Agno-lin, is human and has a right to be incensed by Argentine goalkeeper Nery Pumpido's wasting of time in an attempt to hinder Uruguay's tying the score. Pumpido's act is called gamesmanship — which in more straight-forward language is cheating. Our world has become quite stupid, quite timid, in tolerating this undermining of the arbiter's authority. More fool us. Agnolin, in fact, performed well enough in this combative match to be rewarded with the prestigious semifinal that pitted France against West Germany. He is a strict, sometimes officious man whose whistle does disrupt the free flow of action. Yet could you or I have better controlled the pent up antagonisms between old Latin foes at Puebla? Significantly, the of Bond's America's Cup cambetween old Latin foes at Puebla? Significant paigns, which began in 1974. He tournament as a whole saw the same num has said he would not be a candi-yellow-card official warnings as goals, 132 yellow-card official warnings as goals, 132 io 52 games, and none of Agnolin's seven causions in the Argentine-Uruguay match seemed excessive.

So who are we, who is Nery Pumpido, to query his methods? The referee and the goalie, each at his sporting pinnacle, hall from different worlds. Pumido is reaching out for a World Cup bonus of $50,000, a professional perk that would pay for years of Agnolin's life as a schoolteacher who is receiving $100 a day living allowances in Mexico.

At 43, the referee has 15 years more experience of hife than the mocking goalkeeper. Being a considerable linguist, Agnolin might genuinely have surprised Pum-pido; he is a referee capable of having the final word in Italian, English, French and Spanish, but not appar-cutly in German. For this same man was recently back in the thick of things, and roundly abused by Franz Beckenbauer after West Germany had lost a "friendly" by the score. of 4-1 in Vicana. The defeat was Germany's first on Austrian soil to 55 years, and instead of berating his players for their dreadful indiscipline, Herr Beckenbauer blamed Agnolin for sending off Lothar Matth-aus for dissent and for calling two "unjustified" penalties against the Germans. Der Kaiser denounced Agnolin as a referecing clown whom he wanted taken out of circulation; and whom he certainly never again wanted to have in a match involving Germany. Those who have been around the game for a long time will recognize the symptoms: ambitious young manager, used to getting his way in a glorious playing past, seeking a culprit for his decreased whealth and the second of the second seeking and the second of the se his damaged rebuilding plan.

"We all enjoy a bit of fun," said the Kaiser, humor-lessly, "but this was taking things too far."
How far does he want to go? Players in his game are now creatures of cheating habit (sorry, gamesmanship). Even FIFA condones it, for that peerless authority of the peerless authority of the peerless authority.

thority officially here-worships Maradona.

Turning a blind eye to his handled goal at the World Cup, FIFA holds up "King Diego" as the epitome of the honest professional who crowned his World Cup with "exemplary fairness." The media, according to FIFA, should not continue harping about the fisted goal, for "it is not up to the player to disallow such a goal."

FIFA speaks with forked tongue, insisting that the referecing at the World Cup was excellent. Yet, at least, FIFA stands adamently (and almost alone) in upholding the referee's rule as final.

Society as a whole is caving in to behavior that decides respect for authority and allows, throughout sports, television to usurp the arbiter's decisions.

American football encourages dissent whenever the officials go into an unseemly huddle while awaiting backstage video corroboration of major decisions. Sumo wrestling in Japan discretely does the same, and cricket - once the gentleman's game - allows test matches in Australia to become disfigured by giving spectators, through giant screens at the ground, in stant replays of umpiring gaffes.

Last week an umpire was humiliated by a baying crowd after giving the local hero an out. The poor man stood, head bowed, while the video suggested, on replay after replay, that the batsman had not touched the ball r, too late to span himself admitted that the ball had brushed his gloves and so Mr. Umpire was perfectly correct.

The eye had seen, or the brain had sensed, what the TV less had missed. But rather than stand up against technological aids that corrupt the spirit (and some-times the justice) of play, cricket is considering giving its arbiters wrist-watch monitors to aid their judgment.

The rest of us are in danger of deferring to reflections in the stands, or tiny ones on the wrist. Soccer's only sane path is to demonstrate its stringent physical checks on referees, and some evidence of their impartiality and integrity. We have every right to debate and criticize; we should be entitled to less condescending authoritarianism whenever evidence of bent refereeing is offered.

But we, in turn, must accept that referees are human. Their fallibility is part of the game and it is high time we became old-fashioned enough to view mistakes for what they are takes for what they are.

Otherwise we get the referees we deserve. Why, in such an unfair, brutally scrutinized arena, should professional men — doctors, lawyers, teachers, print-ers, floor cleaners — voluntarily and for expenses only have their egos and their honesty laid bare?

Only one referee at the World Cup earns his real living in the new technology that has been sent to judge him. He is All Bennaceur, a computer scientist from Tunis, and as fate would have it the unfortunate man who has been saddled for life with the infamy of being known the world over as the referee against whom Maradona conned a fisted goal.

Out of Their League

By Russell Baker New YORK -- President Reagan's underground attempt to outwit the Middle East at its own game ought to remind us of Nelson Algren's famous rules for survival, he two most famous of which are (I) never eat at a place called Mom's and (2) never play poker with a man named Doc.

The people running the president's private government were the kind who think they can clean out Doc in Las Vegas and handle Mom's hot-plate special without a stomach pump.

It's an old literary idea that produces the comedy of absurdity, now widely found in television sitcoms. In the White House amateurs' efforts to play secret diplomacy with nations where the ur is somebody too dumb to be sale in the bazaar, sitcom material abounds

In the gaudy cast of characters, for example, there is one Manucher Ghorbanifar, always described in the press as an "Iranian arms merchant." Ghorbanifar was apparently a vital source of information bout life inside the ayatollah's

This information spoke of a "moderate" element that might be induced to be nicer toward the "Great Satan" — that's us — if we sold them gams. Rather late in the game somebody at the CIA got the idea that Ghorbanifar, being an Iranian arms merchant, might have squalid self-serving motives for encouraging this line of diplomacy, and hooked him up to a lie detector. On this, according to a government source cited by The New York Times, he lied about almost everything except his name.

In last weekend's deluge of leaks from the Senate's investigative report, the strange cake-and-Bible story re-emerged from obscurity. Last fall, remember, it was said that Robert McFarlane had gone secretly to Tehran bearing weapons, a cake and a Bible, but this report seemed so ridiculous that it vanished from the news. Now, according to The Washington Post, the Senate report says McFarlane did indeed bring cake and Bible, that the cake was made in Israel and decorated with a chocsigned by President Reagan.

A cake? A chocolate-key decoration? What's that look like? You can't help wanting to know more about this cake. Why baked in Israel? Did it contain something important for somebody in Tehran, the way cakes for convicts are supposed to contain saws?

As for the millions that changed hands in the weapons sale, vast sums seem to have been misplaced, lost, skimmed or stolen. The bank accounts kept by Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North seem to be as hopelessly muddled as the average civilian's checkbook

Here is a government whose tax police can make life a horror and a misery for a $30,000-a-year working stiff who loses his gasoline receipts, and it can't even guess how many millions it's lost because the National Security Council can't balance a checkbook

Absurdities pop up on the fringes. There is now speculation that Patrick Buchanan, the salty talker of the White House staff, may run for president as the new darling of the stone-jaw conserva-

It is hard to imagine a more appropriate presidential candidate for a sitcom than Buchanan, who is everything a presidential candidate must never be, such as an entertaining or — depending how you feel about his causes — an infuriating mischief maker.

He is a man who takes pleasure in raising the world's blood pressure about politics. He is, naturally, a newspaper columnist. It is a measure of how far this business has carried us into the nonsensical that there is not only talk of a newspaper columnist running for president, but that the talk is not laughed away as a burlesque on American life.

The dignity of the state is in collapse at the moment, just when it had begun to seem that one of Reagan's achievements had been its restoration. This is what happens when you let amateurs take on professionals in a part of the world where even the best American diplomacy can probably only hold off disaster one day at a time, President Reagan should have got those men out of the hot sun.

Martha Clarke's 'Through Line' to Kafka

By Mel Gussow New York Tunes Service

F OR almost four months Martha Clarke has been obsessed with Franz Kafka, working on a new theater piece based on his art and life. The process of creating the show has been painstaking, intuitive, highly collaborative and fragmentary. This continues to be true as the first off-Broadway preview on Feb. 3 ap-

In Clarke's work, theater and dance are unified into a style of performance that lacks a name but not a dimension. Her pieces, marked by their precision and visual beauty, are performance art objects.

Using a collage technique, an abstract method influenced by her years as a choreographer of modern dance, the director puts together movement, gesture, music, dramatic scenes — sometimes with dialogue, sometimes without — patterns of light and scenic design. The result, when it succeeds, produces in her words a "fractured clarity." Watching a Clarke theater piece, audiences have been known to sigh with pleasure.

In "The Garden of Earthly Delights," her exhilarating 1984 interpretation of the Hieronymus Bosch painting about heaven and hell, dancers — supported by wires — flew over the stage and over the heads of theatergoers, floating and swirling like heavenly bodies. This serial ballet, to music by the composer Richard Peaslee, was only one of the show's numerous other worldly delights, as the director used the theater as an imagistic canvas in which to animate her impressions of the Bosch trip-

Last season in "Vienna: Lusthaus" the director broadened her palette to include the disparate colors of an entire city — Vienna at the turn of the century. The walls of the set, seen through a scrim, were at a tilt, distorting our view into a dreamlike vision. In tableaux, men often in uniform, women in long dresses and petticoats, conjured up both the elegance and the deca-dence of this city of contradictions (the home of Klimt, Schiele and Schnitzler, of Freud and of Hitler).

With these two major successes behind her and the new show about Kafka opening soon. Clarke is, at 42, at the top of her profession. Watching rehearsals of the Kafka work, I was fascinated by the depth and the detail of the exploration as she and her collaborators - the designers as well as the performers - researched, discussed and tried to understand their difficult sub-

Generally, the dancers were in one studio, actors in another. As the deadline approached, the work seemed to be in disarray. Finally, one day in late December, the director discovered both a title and a theme, or "through-line." The title, "The Hunger Artist," came from the Kafica story

"A Hunger Artist," which deals with a man whose profession is fasting and who evenmally starves himself to death. The through-line is starvation and dying. "Emotional and literal starvation," said Clarke and, realizing the heaviness of that summary, added, "She said langhingly."

Through Clarke's life there has been a simultaneity of choice and chance; when she wanted to do something she had the opportunity to do it. She was born in 1944, the second child and only daughter of a financially secure Baltimore suburban couple. Her father, who died 12 years ago, was a lawyer and formerly a jazz musician and songwriter; her mother plays the piano. Her annt, Shirley Clarke, the avant-garde filmmaker, suggested the name Martha af-ter Martha Graham. It was, as it turned out, a prophetic choice, Beginning at age 6 Clarke studied dancing at the Peabody Conservatory of Music Baltimore and she also took art classes at the Baltimore Museum of Art. By 15 she was studying at the American Dance Festival in Connecticut, where she first saw the work of the choreographer Anna Sokolow.

"I was knocked off my chair by the strong dramatic element."

The following year she applied to the Juilliard School and was so highly regarded that she was encouraged to transfer there before her last year of high school. At Juilliard she studied dance with Louis Horst, a fierce taskmaster who drove her to tears at the same time he inspired her to greater efforts. Though Horst was an associate of Martha Graham, Clarke was less that of Anna Sokolow and Antony Tudor. She joined the Sokolow company, but after three years she felt artistically limited and

Shortly after graduating from Juilliard she married Philip Grausman, a young sculptor and a winner of a Prix de Rome. The two moved to Italy, where they immersed themselves in the world of art. Soon after they returned to the United States their son David (now 18) was born. When Grausman, whom she later divorced, was named an artist in residence at Dartmouth College, his wife was taken again by a desire to perform. Several young Dart-mouth men had started the Pilobolus Dance Theater, and their dance instructor, Alison Chase, and Clarke "elbowed" their way into the all-male company. What drew her to Pilobolus was the group's "irreverence" and its "rediscovery of the body."

After seven years she left and, with the dancer Felix Blaska, formed Crownest. Soon she took a tentative step into theater, choreographing Stravinsky's "L'Histoire du Soldat" at the Long Wharf Theater in New Haven, Connecticut.

Kafra's "A Metamorphosis in Minia-ture" was her New York debut as a theater director. Lasting 35 minutes, this was a dense dramatization of Kafra's story, performed by the late David Rounds and

Some time later, Lyn Austin called the director and said she was applying for a National Endowment for the Arts grant for her theater group and needed a proposal. Austin got this grant and others and "The Garden of Earthly Delights" was created. The piece was a journey through time and space, beginning with prinsordial coze and leading from the Garden of Eden to the Seven Deadly Sins and on to Hell. After its extended engagement at St. Clement's in New York, "Garden" toured America and

By this time, she was creating "Vienna: Lusthans." Over a period of five months, the piece grew from a series of disjointed fragments into a seamless collage. There were moments when she and her collaborative team questioned their own creativity. One day, close to the first public perfor mance, everything seemed to go awry. One dancer said, "This doesn't have a horse's ass to do with Vienna," a sentiment that seemed to echo from the entire company. Clarke slashed 20 minutes out of the piece, rearranged the scenes and compressed it into its final breathtaking form. "I have a terrible fear of things going on too long,"
